Co-Chair - Advocacy

Jesse is a fourth year graduate student in the Clinical Psychology PhD program at the University of Kentucky. His research interests broadly surround optimizing and streamlining evidence-based treatments for posttraumatic stress disorder (PTSD) and co-occurring psychopathology, particularly substance use disorders (SUD). He is also interested in examining the effectiveness of evidence-based practices for PTSD in naturalistic samples and improving public knowledge about and access to effective interventions. Jesse is passionate about his clinical work and enjoys working with individuals with PTSD, anxiety, depression, borderline personality disorder, and beyond. Jesse is a current member of the American Psychological Association (APA), Kentucky Psychological Association (KPA), and the International Society for Traumatic Stress Studies (ISTSS). Outside of clinical and academic work, Jesse likes to spend free time with friends or family, hike in state parks throughout Kentucky, and walk his dog, Maggie.
